DCNR and partners unveil Get Outdoors PA to connect citizens with close-to-home recreation events

Thousands of guided outdoor recreation events this year—from after work hikes to family fishing programs to night-time paddles—will connect people to enriching outdoor experiences through the newly expanded Get Outdoors PA program, DCNR Secretary Ellen Ferretti has announced.

Beginning this past weekend, several partners will be holding “GO” Days on weekends in May and June across the state to introduce people to a variety of outdoor activities.

“Get Outdoors PA programs are successful because they allow people to have fun outdoor experiences in a comfortable, safe setting, guided by a professional who takes the worry out of the outdoors,” Ferretti said.

Ferretti said these reasons and more prevent people from exploring the outdoors and worse, keep them indoors and inactive.

“Ten years ago DCNR began Get Outdoors PA as a way to expand recreational programming in state parks and connect people to the outdoors in a meaningful way,” Ferretti said. “Since that time, tens of thousands of people have enjoyed honing recreation skills and learning about their natural surroundings.

Over the past two years DCNR has worked with the Pennsylvania Recreation and Park Society; the Pennsylvania Land Trust Association; the Fish and Boat and Game commissions; and the Pennsylvania Department of Health, to expand recreational programming into local communities, bringing outdoor experiences closer to where people live.

Today, more than 50 local partners—from land trust organizations to environmental education centers to local parks and recreation departments—are offering events based on the Get Outdoors PA model.

They are no-cost or low-cost high-quality recreation outings with experienced trip leaders that are intended to increase participants' appreciation and active use of parks, forests and public spaces while imparting messages of environmental stewardship and healthy living.

"Get Outdoors PA is not only important for the well-being of our citizens, but also the future of our natural resources," Ferretti said. "While we are getting people active, we are also getting them interested in trees, water, trails and open spaces. The more people enjoy these resources, the more likely they will care and support them."
