WHAT'S HOT

URGENT ACTION NEEDED!

SIGN ON to a letter to your Governor to ensure they keep funding the RTP in your State!

The Recreational Trails Program (RTP) was reauthorized - with dedicated annual funding of $85 million for the remainder of this year and Fiscal Years 2013 and 2014 - when the President signed the transportation reauthorization legislation known as MAP-21 on July 6th. The new legislation does contain one potential roadblock to the continuation of the RTP at the state level: a provision allowing the state governors to opt out of the program if they notify the U.S. Secretary of Transportation of their decision no later than 30 days before the funds are apportioned. Since the funds will be apportioned on October 1st, any opt-out decisions must be sent to US DOT by September 1st.

The International Mountain Bicycling Association (IMBA) has taken the lead for the Coalition for Recreational Trails (CRT) and developed a grass-roots campaign to convince every state governor NOT to opt out of the RTP. IMBA has prepared a letter to be sent individually to each governor that RTP supporters - organizations (not individuals) - from every state will be asked to sign. Signers will be broken down by state and 50 separate letters will be prepared.

We need your help to reach out to your grass-roots contacts, other regional, state and local groups and communities, and any other organizations that benefit from the RTP to ask them to sign the letters, too.

Marianne Wesley Fowler and Derrick A. Crandall, Co-Chairs of the Coalition for Recreational Trails have expressed their gratitude to the trails community, "Working together, we have come a very long way in our effort to protect the RTP.... RTP supporters everywhere should be very proud of that amazing achievement, which was only made possible by the widespread, visible and continuous support that the RTP received prior to enactment of the law. Many, many thanks for your help. The target mailing date for the letters is August 10th so we urgently need your all-out help with this last (we hope) hurdle."

New American Trails webinar: Connecting Greenways, Trails, and Active Mobility

American Trails is hosting an exciting webinar to both launch a new book: The Third Mode: Towards a Green Society. Author Jeff Olson, of Alta + Design, and bicycle-pedestrian leaders, Andy Clarke and Bob Searns, will discuss the latest issues, funding opportunities, and policy. Learn how to integrate active mobility with greenway and trail networks to create seamless metro-wide systems. A free e-book copy of The Third Mode will be provided to the first 100 people who register for the webinar. Proceeds from this webinar and national book launch will benefit American Trails. New MAP-21 transportation law: a guided tour

Under the new authorization, dedicated funding for bicycle and pedestrian programs such as Transportation Enhancements and Safe Routes To School is eliminated. A new program, "Transportation Alternatives," will receive about $780 million for a variety of eligible bike/ped facilities, rails to trails, "safe routes for non drivers," and "community improvement activities." The new program is about a 26% reduction from the current funding for Enhancements and similar programs. Learn more about the new funding programs...

Webinar hosted by RTC: Transportation Alternatives Provisions of MAP-21 for Implementers

The Rails-to-Trails Conservancy (RTC) is hosting webinars on the impacts of MAP-21 on local trail, walking and bicycling projects. Their next webinar, "Transportation Alternatives Provisions of MAP-21 for Implementers," will be held Tuesday, July 31 at 1:00 p.m. EDT.

This webinar will address specific issues faced by local and state agencies that are responsible for implementing the new Transportation Alternatives section of MAP-21. Confirmed panelists include:

- Christopher Douwes, trails and enhancements program manager at the Federal Highway Administration
- Amber Thelen, TE program coordinator for the Michigan

Recreational Trails Program funding continues for two years

The new law for surface transportation funding was signed into law July 6, 2012. The Recreational Trails Program is continued intact, thanks to the earlier amendment by Senator Amy Klobuchar of Minnesota. However, States are given the right to "opt out" of the entire program, in which case the funds stay in the State and can go to other Transportation Alternatives categories. Funding is set at $85 million a year for two years and expires at the end of fiscal year 2014. Learn more about Recreational Trails Program funding...

How much funding will your State get?

Even though there is some disappointment over the final transportation bill, there are still important funding opportunities. Trails and bike/ped are included in several categories of eligibility. The $85 million "apportioned" annually to the States for Recreational Trails Program grants will be the same as FY09. See how much your State will receive in RTP funds. The new Transportation Alternatives program as well as the CMAQ category can fund bike/ped facilities. See a summary of estimated FY 2013 apportionments for your State...

Swamp Rabbit Trail shows its value for health and the economy
One of the most popular assets in Greenville County is one that encourages physical activity, helps combat obesity, fuels the local economy, creates opportunities for family bonding and provides good, simple fun. All along the trail businesses have popped up to serve hungry and thirsty trail users. And other businesses are inventing themselves as a destination point on this almost 14-mile trail that should be an example for other cities and counties that are contemplating building their own trails. Better maps help build public interest in trail linkages
In Utah there's a statewide push to link hundreds of miles of trails for use by pedestrians, equestrians, biking enthusiasts and off-road vehicle riders. Davis County has been trying to get the word out. A website established in 2010 and updated last year takes advantage of GIS technology and Esri software to give trail users a spatial reference for the distance and topography of a particular trail. Why trail courtesy is a matter of life and death

Trail courtesy is not just yelling "on your left" and flying by. A Washington Post report on the death of a pedestrian is a reminder of the importance of slowing down. Ita Lapina, 80- a Russian immigrant who fled the Nazis during World War II - was killed on the Four Mile Run trail when a bicyclist collided with her during her daily walk. "The bicyclist rang his bell and yelled 'to your left' to warn her he was approaching, county police said, and Lapina stepped to her left." Read more...

Mini-grants fund trail and river connections in PA towns

"State Rep. Karen Boback is encouraging local communities along the Susquehanna River to apply for mini-grants to fund small projects that would improve the quality of both communities and the river itself," reported the Wilkes-Barre Times Leader." Eligible projects include improving trail connections, riverfront parks, river access, and protecting water quality. The theme for the 2012-13 grant program is "Connecting Susquehanna Greenway River Towns," and funding is provided by Pennsylvania Department of Conservation and Natural Resources. Read more...

Evarts is on track to become first Trail Town in Kentucky

The Harlan Daily Enterprise reported on Kentucky's Trail Towns program. According to Elaine Wilson, Executive Director of Adventure Tourism for the state, one of the benefits of becoming a Trail Town is the economic impact. "We want to move people outdoors," said Wilson. "We want to get the communities that are around these resources... to benefit economically. The state wants to be able to promote communities that are gateways into those areas where all kinds of activities can take place. Because it brings a lot of money into your community." Connecting Kids and Families to the West's Great Outdoors

Why aren't more kids getting outside? The Nature Conservancy conducted a poll in 2011 to find out some of the answers. In response, the Western Governors' Association launched the Get Out West! initiative. A new report from the Governors' report examines why children are not connecting to nature, highlights what public and private organizations can do to engage youth in the outdoors, and recommends policies governors can pursue to make it easier for kids and families to Get Out West! Memphis is off to a beautiful start with ambitious plans for the Wolf River. Upon its completion the Wolf River Greenway Trail will extend for 22 miles connecting public greenways and recreational trails. The Wolf River Conservancy shares responsibility with the City of Memphis, and works to protect the floodplain, wetlands, and wildlife habitats, while providing trails and public access. The Greenway is one of the National Recreation Trails designated in 2012. Read more and see photos...

New "Cool Trail Solutions" photo gallery: signs and etiquette for shared-use urban trails

Helping different types of users to share the trail is as important on urban greenways as on backcountry paths. In many urban trail corridors the sheer amount of use creates difficulties for sharing the trail. Wider trails are one solution. But how wide do you want to make the trail? And does a single surface material satisfy all trail users? In many cases, the better solution is to provide two or even three pathways or trail treads with different surfaces.
