

New signs promote Danville history

A sign about the old North Branch Canal, top photo, is shown at Canal Park next to the borough hall on Mill Street in downtown Danville. The Susquehanna Greenway Partnership has placed three new interpretive signs in Danville with a grant from the Montour County Tourism Fund. Montour County historian Sis Hause provided the historical photos used in the project.

Riverfront Park, left, hosts one of the interpretive signs. The signs' purpose is "to promote heritage tourism to Danville as a form of sustainable economic development," according to the Susquehanna Greenway Partnership. The Columbia-Montour Visitors Bureau administers the grant program that provided money for the project.

A sign about the Hard Coal Navy, right, stands along the Susquehanna River at Montgomery Park in Danville. The sign explains how coal was dredged from the river.
